

Mindy Gallagher

I attended Grinnell College, then completed my bachelor's degree in Anthropology and Biology at the University of Washington. After I moved to Alaska, I worked for BLM and then Tanana Chiefs Conference, working with Native allotment and village land titles. I enjoyed traveling around to Interior villages and helping people with their land claims. After taking time off to raise my 2 kids, I returned to work in the school district as an aide and a tutor. I am returning as the Alaska Native Education tutor at Effie Kokrine Charter School. My husband and I have 2 children who are now grown; both of them got married last year. My son is working in carpentry while he starts his own business and my daughter working with a costume designer in California. My husband and I enjoy gardening, camping, hiking, and travel. I also am an avid knitter and enjoy sewing.
